

TV'S 2022-23 PRIMETIME UPFRONT CLOSES WITH MODEST GAINS

Media Dynamics, Inc. releases preliminary estimates in advance of its annual upfront and CPM-CPP reports

Nutley, NJ, July 25, 2022 - While a few minor deals are still being negotiated, it is possible for us to release our estimates of ad spending and CPMs for the 2022-23 primetime upfront as these will not substantially alter the projections.

It appears that the five broadcast TV networks took in $9.9 billion in primetime sales—up a modest 6.4% from the previous upfront—while the cable channels sold $10.2 billion, a 5.2% increase. In total, the "linear TV" upfront was up 5.8%, to $20.1 billion.

2021-22 VS. 2022-23 SEASONS
(In $ Mil.)

	2021-22	2022-23	% Increase
Broadcast TV Networks	9,310	9,910	6.4
Cable Channels	9,725	10,230	5.2
Total	19,035	20,140	5.8

The sellers did better when it came to CPMs for 30-second commercials, averaging a gain of 9.6% for the broadcast TV networks and 6.6% for cable, however these increases were well below last year's spectacular hikes due to buyer concerns about the looming threat of an economic recession as well as the shifting of considerable amounts of national ad spend to streaming venues. Linear TV sellers were willing to trade off smaller CPM increases for their linear TV platforms in exchange for increases—often at higher CPMs—for their streaming services (see Table 2).

It should be noted that the primetime upfront figures we are reporting do not reflect the totality of the upfront. Upfront ad sales by the broadcast TV networks as well as cable channels and national program syndicators in other dayparts (early AM, daytime, early evening, prime access, and late night) amounted to $10-12 billion, while the broadcast TV networks and some cable channels also sold about $2 billion of digital ad time, mostly in the form of sponsored episodes of primetime shows on their websites. Finally, approximately $5-6 billion went to upfront buys on CTV/AVOD platforms. So, the total upfront involves about $36-40 billion, not just the $20 billion that the broadcast TV networks and cable channels garnered for their "linear TV" primetime programs.

Commenting on the 2022-23 upfront, Media Dynamics, Inc. president, Ed Papazian, noted, "a definite softness in cable sales relative to broadcast, as many buyers felt that they were better off diverting fairly large sums to streaming venues, despite their higher CPMs, as a hedge against future scatter market pricing for broadcast prime." Papazian further pointed out the continuing bias against cable that is part of the story: "Cable's CPM advantages aside, many advertisers feel that the erosion of cable's reach due to cord cutting, the perceived lower quality of much of its program fare, plus over commercialization, makes it less desirable than broadcast TV network prime placements and what can be had on CTV/AVOD."
